Design lecturer to take part in prestigious design exhibition

A DESIGN lecturer at Havering College of Further and Higher Education is taking part in a prestigious exhibition as part of the London Design Festival.

Dr Jane Norris, Curriculum Manager of the BA (Honours) 3D Design Craft course at the college in Hornchurch, was selected by the Italian company Ventura to have a stand at 'designjunction'.

During the London Design Festival, running from 18-21 September, designjunction takes over the Sorting Office at 21-23 New Oxford Street, London WC1A 1BA.

Dr Jane Norris will be showcasing Studio Viatopia: Polychronic objects on Stand 22A through the products of her research project which explores how materials are viewed and ways they can be combined in objects.

There will be an interactive element to the display with visitor comments and feedback recorded for research development and future project generation.

Last year's designjunction attracted over 21,000 visitors and the show is regarded as central London's leading destination for design and the most important global meeting point of the London Design Festival.

Students on the BA (Honours) 3D Design Craft course at Havering College are benefitting from the experience by assisting Dr Norris with the exhibition.

Dr Norris, who is also a freelance interior designer with experience in restaurant design, said: "This is a body of on-going research that needs interaction with the public to explore informed attitudes about how materials are viewed and ways they can be combined in objects.

"This is therefore a rare opportunity to 'open source' Studio Viatopia's project and to collaborate with an audience that is passionate and knowledgeable about design. The aim by exhibiting at Ventura London is to create significant attention, new professional contacts, and international exposure for the work of Studio Viatopia and its members."
